More cash for cabbies

Fare hike includes yet another cam surcharge

By TIM WIECLAWSKI
Metro Ottawa

A cab ride in Ottawa is about to become the most expensive in Canada — partly to help drivers pay for security cameras in their cars.

A city committee yesterday approved a 10 per cent increase to cab fares and an additional 10 cents-per-trip surcharge to cover the cost of installing mandatory security cameras in taxis, bringing the price of a five-kilometre trip in Ottawa to $11.71. That is 21 cents more than St. John's, N.L., which currently has the most expensive cabs.

fatter fares

» If approved by council, passengers will be charged $3.30 after the first 110 metres driven and 16 cents for every 93 meters after that, as of June 1.

Yusef Al Mezel, president of the union representing the majority of Ottawa cab drivers, said the proposed new charges are needed to cope with rising fuel and insurance costs, and dispatch fees.

This would mark the first fare increase in Ottawa since 2005. At that time, the city also imposed a five-cent surcharge to each trip to raise money for cabbies to offset the costs of installing mandatory security cameras in coming years. However, Al Mezel said drivers used that money to offset other costs, and the union asked for a new 10-cent surcharge with this increase for the cameras.

Despite cab drivers' protests about the cameras last February, a July 2 deadline to have them installed is looming.

"It's a better deal than the old one, but we are still not happy because of the other issues involving the drivers," Al Mezel said.

Al Mezel said drivers barely agreed to the cameras and only after Ottawa agreed to restrict the release of footage to police officers who were conducting a criminal investigation, and to back down on installing a 'G-trigger feature' that would activate the camera if the vehicle swerved sharply, or was in a collision.

To further assist drivers with the cameras, the city is agreeing to cover $485, interest free, leaving drivers to pay the remaining $700 per camera. The city's portion will be recovered through collection fee surcharges.

Susan Jones, director of bylaw services, said Ottawa was the only city in Canada that had a cost-sharing arrangement for their taxi drivers' security cameras.

"This is a uniquely creative deal that we are offering the industry," she said.

City approves underpass arts

But homeless see performances as way to clear tunnel

By TIM WIECLAWSKI
Metro Ottawa

Businesses near the Rideau Street underpass are already looking to spruce up the dark, concrete atmosphere of the controversial space before hosting cultural events there this summer.

A city committee yesterday gave the Downtown Rideau Business Improvement Area the nod to use the underpass for arts and musical performances. Peggy DuCharme, executive director of the BIA, said the first order of business would be to "visually enhance the space."

DuCharme said the BIA is considering relocating street art to the area, as well as erecting signage.

short performances

» DuCharme said most performances would be short, busker style acts, so people will not have to stand long. The BIA hopes to partner with the Ottawa Arts Coalition and have programming in place by July 1.

The underpass has long been a place where homeless people have sought shelter until the city recently installed a black fence to block access. Steven Beriault, 21, was sleeping there with other street youth in 2006 when he was murdered.

Bringing performances and crowds to the underpass is seen by some homeless advocates as another way to chase out the people who shelter there and they are wary that the space is controlled by businesses, which they feel are hostile to the needs of the homeless.

The committee also approved a pilot project that permits social-service agencies and churches to sell items made by homeless people on their property and abutting city sidewalks.

"It would be an organized way of providing them with an opportunity," said councillor Georges Bedard. "What was initially proposed … is that they would be left loose with no organization and they could do whatever they wanted and that's totally unacceptable."

Tally flies higher for United Way

Fundraising record set in 2007 drive

By TRACEY TONG
Metro Ottawa

United Way/Centraide Ottawa announced yesterday that it had raised more than $29.8 million during its 2007 community campaign — a new record for the organization.

Members of the board of directors — who announced the final, audited tally at its annual general meeting yesterday — elicited applause and cheers from attendees after announcing that donations that rolled in following the close of last year's campaign had allowed it to exceed its ambitious $29.7 million goal, even if by just $140,157.

"We achieved great success in 2007 and that is a testament to the enthusiasm and generosity of our staff, volunteers and donors," said United Way/Centraide Ottawa president and CEO Michael Allen. "Wayne Wouters demonstrated stellar leadership during the campaign."

The 2007 campaign chair, Wouters said that while last year went well, 2008 would have to be just as successful.

"The need in the city continues to grow," he said. "It just gets bigger and better, but the needs are also getting bigger."

« It just gets bigger and better, but the needs are also getting bigger. »

Campaign chair Wayne Wouters

In 2007, United Way/Centraide Ottawa supported a record 184 projects, programs and partnerships in 99 community organizations.

"People have to step up and dig a little deeper," Wouters said. "We all want to make the world a better place to live."

The capital's United Way campaign is one of Canada's leaders, said United Way Canada president Al Hatton. "A number of United Ways across the country are following your lead. And we're impressed by the way you're drawing new partners," he said.

The campaign attracted 57 new major donors last year.

The 2008 campaign begins in September and will be headed by campaign chairman Bell Enterprise Group senior vice-president, Sal Iacono.

Swarming arrests made

By TRACEY TONG
Metro Ottawa

A series of downtown swarmings, in which up to eight people randomly assaulted and robbed lone victims, led to the arrest of four people yesterday.

But city police still seek several other suspects after three people were assaulted and robbed in the core within a one-hour span late Wednesday and early yesterday morning.

In all three cases, the victims were punched in the back of the head. Two of the victims were robbed, though a third managed to run away before the culprits could take anything.

The first incident happened at 11:54 p.m. Wednesday near Rideau Street and Colonel By Drive.

The second occurred half an hour later, at 12:23 a.m. yesterday, at Bank Street and Laurier Avenue, but the victim managed to run away and call police.

At 12:49 a.m. yesterday, police received another report of a man who being punched in the back of the head while he was standing at the corner of Bank and Slater streets.

A police officer responding to the complaint spotted people matching the suspects' descriptions on an OC Transpo bus, and four adult males were arrested. Police continue to seek other suspects.

Anyone with information is asked to call the police robbery section at 613-236-1222, ext. 5116.

Speeding's other costs

Program puts human face to consequences

By TIM WIECLAWSKI
Metro Ottawa

Five years ago, a speeding car that had run a red light struck Laura McLaughlin as she was crossing Fallowfield Road.

Fortunately, she suffered no major injuries, but a police officer on the scene told her mother, Brenda, that if Laura had taken another step farther into the intersection, she would likely have been killed.

Now age 21, the memory of the collision still has the power to make McLaughlin apprehensive whenever she crosses the street.

"In a sense I was lucky. I had no broken bones and was physically well except for a concussion and cuts and scrapes," she said. "Unfortunately I was not ready for the psychological aftermath."

She afterward suffered anxiety attacks when crossing a street, and would compulsively check both ways dozens of times before taking a step. A therapist diagnosed her with post-traumatic stress disorder.

McLaughlin was chosen as the honorary chairperson of the city's "Speeding Costs You" campaign, as police seek to show how the consequences of driving over the speed limit can be much more serious than a ticket.

TIM WIECLAWSKI/METRO OTTAWA

A speeding car hit Laura McLaughlin, 21, at a pedestrian crossing on Fallowfield Road five years ago. Today, she is still anxious whenever she crosses a street.

"People need to be paying attention to how they're driving and speeding is a large cause of fatal accidents," said Deputy Police Chief Sue O'Sullivan.

There were 40 fatal collisions in Ottawa last year, with more than half of those attributed to speeding motorists.

Heading into the long weekend, city officials are urging drivers to be cautious, said Mike Flainek, the city's director of Traffic and Parking Operations, reminding drivers to slow down through signs and speed boards placed at high-collision intersections over the next three months.

Campaign targets sexual exploitation

By TRACEY TONG
Metro Ottawa

Social workers and city police are drawing on students' creativity to address the growing problem of sexually exploited adolescents in Ottawa.

A committee of police, the Children's Aid Society and the Youth Services Bureau of Ottawa yesterday unveiled a student-designed poster as part of its community awareness campaign on the issue of sexually exploited adolescents.

"(Sexual exploitation) is going on in our community," said Deputy Chief Sue O'Sullivan, at the Canterbury High School event.

Police say sexual exploitation is an issue that officers and youth workers are seeing more frequently.

"We recognize that it's a significant problem for a select population of youth," said Ottawa Police Sgt. Mark Houldsworth.

"How we're going to beat this is by working together," O'Sullivan said. "These messages are written for youth by youth and there's nothing more powerful than peer to peer."

"I think the issues surrounding youth are best addressed by youth," agreed Jordana Globerman, whose poster design, which has important contact numbers at the bottom, was chosen. "We have a responsibility to help each other."

–tracey.tong@metronews.ca

definition

» Because there's no firm definition of sexual exploitation, it's impossible to say how many city youth are affected, said Ottawa Police Sgt. Mark Houldsworth.

British Columbia women who need an emergency contraceptive might soon be able to grab one right off the pharmacy shelf.

Yesterday, Plan B — also known as the morning-after pill — was granted over-the-counter status by the National Association of Pharmacy Regulatory Authorities.

Canada became the fifth country in the world to do so, but the B.C. College of Pharmacists must also give its approval before Plan B moves from behind the counter.

Until yesterday, Plan B was available without a prescription but women had to ask a pharmacist for it.

Marshall Moleschi, registrar with the B.C. College of Pharmacists, said a recommendation to the provincial government must still be made, but it will likely be approved in a few months.

Maxime Bernier takes $70,000 flight

MINISTER Tory cabinet minister Maxime Bernier has a taste for expensive travel, government records show.

Bernier, who has been foreign affairs minister since last August, took a $22,573 airline flight to attend a two-day conference in Laos last November. Torstar News Service checked airfares and found that the minister could have made the trip to the South East Asian country comfortably for under $7,000. With him on the trip were three staff.

With the additional cost of hotels and meals, the total bill to taxpayers was about $70,000. Bernier's flight was the most expensive flight taken by a government minister or official since the Harper government took power two years ago, according to government records. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

California OK's gay marriage

The California Supreme Court overturned a ban on same-sex marriages yesterday in a major victory for gay rights advocates that will allow homosexual couples to marry in the most populous U.S. state.

The court found that California laws limiting marriage to heterosexual couples are at odds with rights guaranteed by the state's constitution. Opponents of gay marriage vowed to contest the ruling with a statewide ballot measure for a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriages.

The ruling would allow California to be the second state, after Massachusetts, to allow gay marriage. Connecticut, New Hampshire, New Jersey and Vermont permit same-sex civil unions that grant largely similar rights as those for married couples but lack the full, federal legal protections of marriage.

4-3 ruling

» The California court's 4-3 decision overturns state laws prohibiting same-sex nuptials and is likely to influence other states expected to rule on gay marriage.

Californians in 2000 voted to reaffirm a 1977 state law defining marriage as union of a man and woman. But four years later, San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom challenged that law by issuing marriage licenses to gay couples, which led to the court battle decided yesterday by the state Supreme Court. U.S. can win Iraq war by 2013: McCain

Speech comes as House votes to set withdrawal goal

Republican presidential candidate John McCain said yesterday he believes the Iraq war can be won by 2013, leaving a functioning democracy there and allowing most U.S. troops to come home.

It was the first time the Arizona senator has said when U.S. troops could be withdrawn from Iraq.

His speech came as the House voted to set a goal of withdrawing all troops by the end of next year and defeated legislation to fund the war.

The five-year war is unpopular with the U.S. public and McCain's Democratic rivals for the White House, Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton, have pledged to begin bringing U.S. troops home right away.

McCain has called such promises reckless and agrees with U.S. President George W. Bush that troop levels should be governed by conditions on the ground.

Speaking with reporters after his speech, McCain insisted he was not talking about a timetable for withdrawal but discussing what he believed would be achieved. REUTERS

CAW reaches deals with GM, Chrysler

Buyouts for GM's Windsor workers part of agreement

The Canadian Auto Workers union reached tentative contracts with General Motors and Chrysler LLC yesterday, wrapping up a lightning round of talks with Detroit automakers intended to protect workers from an even deeper downturn in the industry.

With five months remaining on the current contracts, the deals marked the earliest agreements ever negotiated by the Canadian union, which rushed to clinch deals with two of the Big Three automakers on the same day, a first since its 1985 split from the U.S.-based United Auto Workers.

CAW president Buzz Hargrove said protecting employees in the face of major layoffs was the union's priority in the GM talks. Windsor, Ont. workers, whose plant is closing, will be offered buyouts of up to $125,000. REUTERS

Housing 'coming off the boil'

Canada's housing market is "coming off the boil" with the average resale home price in Canada registering its first inflation-adjusted quarterly decline in seven years, says a Scotiabank report.

Existing home sales have now fallen for four consecutive months while running at 15 per cent below last year's levels. The cooling is most evident in western cities such as Calgary and Edmonton, as both centres, according to the bank, have "officially moved into buyers' territory." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Flyers fend off Penguins

Philadelphia avoids sweep with 4-2 victory

FLYERS 4 PENGUINS 2

Martin Biron made 36 saves to help the Philadelphia Flyers to a 4-2 win over the Pittsburgh Penguins, avoiding elimination in Game 4 of the Eastern Conference finals last night in Philadelphia.

Joffrey Lupul scored twice while Danny Briere and Jeff Carter each scored for the Flyers, who forced a Game 5, which will take place in Pittsburgh Sunday afternoon. Scott Hartnell had three assists in the game.

Jordan Staal scored both goals while Marc-Andre Fleury made 30 saves for the Penguins, who are looking to advance to the Stanley Cup finals for the first time since 1992.

The Flyers came storming out of the gates in the first period and took the play to Pittsburgh.

Philadelphia took a 1-0 lead at the 8:27 mark of the opening frame as Lupul blasted a slapshot from the right circle that tipped off a Penguin stick and sailed over the left shoulder of Fleury.

The Flyers then scored a pair of power-play goals to take a 3-0 lead into the second period.

With Sergei Gonchar in the box, Randy Jones blasted a shot from the high slot that Fleury stopped. However, Briere was behind the defence and swept in the rebound from down low with 8:12 left in the period. Near the end of the frame, R.J. Umberger fired a shot from the right point that was stopped by Fleury. Carter, though, dug out the puck and backhanded it into the net.

John Avery goes tilt on Pinball

YORK REPORT
MARTY YORK
marty.york@metronews.ca

Barking up the wrong tree these days is John Avery, who has damaged his CFL status by insulting and criticizing Michael Clemons.

This is tantamount to, say, dissing Mother Teresa. I mean, seriously, how foolish can you be?

In his two decades as a Hall of Fame player, coach and executive with the Toronto Argonauts, Pinball Clemons has established himself as the CFL's version of Mother Teresa, with countless acts of kindness, humanity and benevolence. Heck, this is a dude who once removed the shoes from his feet, gave them to a needy child in an Ottawa hospital and then walked to his hotel room in his socks — IN THE RAIN!

«Michael Clemons once removed the shoes from his feet, gave them to a needy child in an Ottawa hospital and then walked to his hotel room in his socks — IN THE RAIN!»

No one knocks Pinball. No one, that is, except Avery, who was released by the Argos in January after four years of underachieving as a highly-paid running back. Clemons was Avery's coach.

We figured Clemons showed remarkable patience in keeping Avery on the payroll. Avery didn't see it that way.

"The biggest disappointment I had was Clemons," Avery told reporters earlier this month. "He brought me in and made me believe he had my best interests in mind and was going to look out for me. (Then) he basically stepped back and let (negative developments) happen."

Now, Avery can't find a CFL job. Even the Hamilton Pussy-Cats flatly rejected him.

This is a league that will employ drug addicts and potheads and convicts and troublemakers and NFL discards such as Andre Rison, Ricky Williams, David Boston, Charles Rogers and, soon, maybe even Chris Henry, but there's no room in the CFL for John Avery.

This is what happens when you have the audacity to backstab Michael Clemons.

» Soon, when the Tampa Bay Lightning fire John Tortorella, there will be seven NHL teams without a coach ... After five consecutive losses in the first round of the NBA playoffs, the Denver Nuggets are dangling two stars in trade talks — Carmelo Anthony and Marcus Camby ... There's no reason to suggest U.S. President George W. Bush knows more about baseball than anything else, but he likes the Blue Jays' Roy Halladay. Halladay is 4-5. Bush said: "He's a steady guy. He burns up innings."

» More on maple bats: Philadelphia Phillies general manager Pat Gillick compares them to "missiles" and is openly worried about the safety of fans in the stands.

The cusp of stardom

Zaki Ibrahim has made a name in the underground

By DUSTIN ESPANOL
for Metro Ottawa

Profile

"PEOPLE KEEP TELLING me, 'Zaki, you need to be more hungry,' and I don't know if I need to be," says singer Zaki Ibrahim, balking at moving at a pace that could compromise her artistry.

"Instead of forcing something, I need to see how things make sense when they're moving naturally."

Wise words spoken from an artist who has seen her stock rise exponentially since indie debut, Shö (Iqra In Orange) made the underground circuit in 2006. While gaining experience on the road as support for K'Naan and Bedouin Soundclash, the South African-born, Vancouver-bred songstress quickly developed a strong following, winning fans over with her powerful voice and socially conscious lyrics.

Now with a new EP, Eclectica (Episodes In Purple), being distributed through Sony BMG, her soulful music will soon reach larger audiences.

"I almost couldn't imagine taking (a music career) seriously," she explains. "But then I realized it's all the same in that you're taking yourself seriously and (this opportunity) is not to be taken for granted."

Nor does she forget the cast that has helped sustain her — District Six Music, a collective of DJs, producers and artists with a penchant for good music with a cause.

"You're only as good as your team. Working with people you trust and love is important because it helps you to be more creative."

Duffy

Album: Rockferry
Label: A&M/Rough Trade
Release Date: May 13

DUFFY IS THE LATEST in the line of female '60s soul revivalists from the U.K., but Rockferry showcases a fresh mix of that era's more elegant elements. Sweeps of string sections, smooth guitar licks and tambourine shakes complement the arrangements, creating a stark but classic Motown feel with just the right blend of tenderness and drama. The production is thick, but suits a voice that crosses somewhere between Dusty Springfield and Diana Ross, helping these love songs soar away from standard retro ground.

While Duffy may lack the power of classic girl-groups, of all the new blue-eyed soul sirens she may be the leader of the pack.

Death Cab For Cutie's new album Narrow Stairs is now in stores.

Death Cab For Cutie

Album: Narrow Stairs
Label: Atlantic Records
Release Date: May 13

DESCRIBED BY LEAD guitarist Chris Walla as "having teeth," Death Cab For Cutie's Narrow Stairs is a departure from the band's usual delicate fare. Though sonically similar to 2005's Plans, Stairs is a vastly darker, yet strangely compelling album bordering on the line of despair. Comprised of ghostly guitar riffs, distorted vocals, and layers of disorienting feedback, the album's bold new arrangements perfectly complement front man Ben Gibbard's harrowing and intriguingly morose lyrics.

WINFIELD TSAO/FOR METRO OTTAWA

Neil Diamond

Album: Home Before Dark
Label: Columbia Records
Release Date: May 6

DIAMOND SOLICITS THE help of Rick Rubin once again, and the producer's touch is evident on the Songwriting Hall of Famer's latest work: Much like the late Johnny Cash's American Recordings series, it opts for a pared-down sound steeped in solitude and introspection. Fearing loneliness at 67, his muse is his girlfriend (If I Don't See You Again). Home Before Dark has great moments (a duet with Dixie Chick Natalie Maines on Another Day That Time Forgot), but can also skirt the maudlin (No Words).

The Wet Secrets

Album: Rock Fantasy
Label: Rodeo Peanut Records
Release Date: may 13

WHAT THIS EDMONTON band lacks in substance they make up for style and bravado. And really, when you are in a dance rock marching band, what's more important, substance or matching uniforms? A side project of members of Shout Out Out Out Out, the Wet Secrets have a knack for catchy hooks that combine electronica, trumpets and pep rally enthusiasm. The result is a dance party that's a bit tongue in cheek, but hard not to enjoy.

Jason Mraz

Album: We Sing, We Dance, We Steal Things.
Label: Atlantic/Warner
Release Date: May 13

WHO ON EARTH advised the Virginia-born, San Diego-based songster to ditch the rap-cum-scat-inspired word-play pop of his first two discs in favour of more Starbucks-friendly middle-of-the-road smooth jazz-pop? Sure, all the squeaky-clean arranged horn, string and choir backdrops sound pleasant enough. But Mraz sounds far less inspired to go the all-the-lyrics-you-can-fit stylings of, say, The Dynamo Of Volition and more interested in pursuing safer, inoffensive fare threaten to place him on par as a new-generation — perhaps even lighter —Phil Collins or, in the case of Only Human, George Michael.

The Chronicles Of Narnia:
Prince Caspian

Director Andrew Adamson
PG

By CHRIS ATCHISON
for Metro Ottawa

Ben Barnes stars in The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian.

REVIEW IT'S NO SECRET that special effects advances in the past 15 years have dramatically changed the movie-going experience.

Nowhere is this more noticeable than in the science fiction and fantasy genres where scenes that at one time would have been impossible to shoot are now realized with seeming ease using sophisticated computer-generated imagery.

The Chronicles Of Narnia films are a perfect example of these advancements put to good use, the latest installment of which — Prince Caspian — proves once again that filmmakers are treating fantasy novels with loving respect when it comes time to adapt them for the big screen.

The second film in the series — based on the second of author C.S. Lewis' Narnia books — sees Peter, Susan, Edmund and Lucy transported from Second World War London to Narnia through a subway station.

One year has passed in Earth time since their last adventure, translating to about 1,300 Narnian years. Much has changed in the mystical world as the talking animals and creatures that once dominated the landscape have long since faded into folklore.

Now the Telmarines, a race of humans, control the land.

A cast of characters including the Black Dwarf Nikabrik (Warwick Davis), the cynical dwarf Trumpkin (Peter Dinklage) and a swashbuckling mouse named Reepicheep (Eddie Izzard) help the four Pevensie kids restore Narnia to its former glory.

Oscar-nominated director Andrew Adamson (Shrek, Shrek 2) does a fine job bringing Lewis' story to life with a blend of old-fashioned sword fights and dazzling special effects — the climactic final battle is spectacular and well worth the wait. His screenplay, co-written with Christopher Markus and Stephen McFeely, is a satisfying continuation from where The Lion, The Witch, and the Wardrobe left off, all the while incorporating theatrical scenes that only build on Lewis' brilliantly-detailed story.

It should be noted, however, that seeing The Lion, The Witch And The Wardrobe is important for those who actually want to follow the storyline.

It's not impossible to pick up on the action, but it will only enhance the viewing experience for fans in yet another well-casted, well-written entry into what will surely be a long-running Narnia series.

Spurlock strikes again

Where In The World Is Osama Bin Laden?

Director Morgan Spurloc
PG

By STEVE GOW

Morgan Spurlock joins the hunt for America's most wanted man.

REVIEW BY FEASTING on fatty foods for his hit documentary Super Size Me, Morgan Spurlock wrestled with one of the world's biggest corporate fast-food giants. Now, with Where in the World is Osama bin Laden?, Spurlock is upsizing his canvass to take on another international brand name — al Qaeda.

As he did with Super Size Me, Spurlock takes center stage, exposing himself first-hand to the Muslim world in search of al Qaeda's lead conductor.

Why, you ask? Well, as in all big summer action flicks, it always comes down to "one lonely man" to catch the bad dude.

Of course, that's only the MacGuffin. In reality, Spurlock goes to shed light on the cultural misconceptions between the Middle East and America.

At this, he does make a few discoveries but mainly, we just learn that both Starbuck's and pro wrestling are popular the world over.

Unlike his confrontational counterpart Michael Moore (Sicko), Spurlock's approach works best because he genuinely seems earnest, interested and looking for a laugh. There's surely no denying Spurlock's charm and he keeps things moving using various animated devices (like Osama dancing to M.C. Hammer's "You Can't Touch This" for instance).

However, the problem here is that the movie pretty much exposes what most folks likely already know — that America is suffering a terrible PR problem in the Middle East.

After spending a week in Egypt, Spurlock is surprised to find that America's image is damaged. Hell, I could've told him that before he jumped on the plane.

In the end, you may not find yourself enlightened, but then again, maybe you will. A lot of people were shocked to find out eating nothing but cheeseburgers is bad for you too.

Quote OF THE WEEK

"It's flattering that anybody still cares about these characters. But it's like an amoeba — ever-growing and out of control."

Kenny doesn't stink

Kenny

Stars Shane Jacobson
Director Clayton Jacobson

By CHRIS ATCHISON
for Metro Ottawa

Kenny takes a trip into the life of a septic tank technician.

REVIEW IF YOU'VE ever been at a major outdoor event, say a summer music festival, and wondered who in the world takes care of the fleet of portable toilets deployed to tend to the inevitable needs of those attending, look no further — Kenny Smyth is your man.

Smyth (Shane Jacobson) is the hero of the critically-acclaimed Australian mockumentary Kenny, about a devoted septic technician (although he refers to himself as a plumber) who risks it all on a daily basis to make sure people have facilities in place when nature calls.

We quickly find out in the opening few minutes of director Clayton Jacobson's film that Kenny has given up much of his life for his beloved job.

His wife has left him, he sees his son Jessee (Jesse Jacobson) only occasionally and his father (Ronald Jacobson) feels this sort of work is beneath his son.

But still Kenny Smyth presses on, waging war against the foulest of foes — the stuff that's left in those horrendous portalets after heavy public usage — all the while imparting his down-home wisdom to explain his occupation, his ex-wife's prickly attitude and the idiosyncrasies of his family.

Shane Jacobson does a brilliant job bringing Kenny to life and reminds of an Aussie-version of Trailer Park Boys' Ricky, only a bit smarter and with a slightly broader world view.

The comedy is naturally very Australian from its rhythm to its references (it's subtitled to help North American audiences unaccustomed to the Down Under accent) and makes some interesting social observations along the way.

Although it drags at times, Kenny is a heart-warming comedy that highlights the point that a person's simplicity doesn't necessarily indicate a lack of ability. Kenny is anything but dumb — in fact, he's a whiz with a septic tank — and a life-altering visit to a Nashville waste management convention proves just that.

His occupational philosophy can be summed up in one of his memorable quotes: "I don't know what all the fuss is about. It's 80 per cent water," he says of the waste he disposes of daily, "and we've got chemicals to take care of the remaining 20."

Kenny isn't the best mockumentary to hit theatres in recent years, but it's definitely worth a look.

Son Of Rambow captures the dichotomy of youth

Son Of Rambow

Stars Neil Dudgeon, Bill Milner
Director Garth Jennings

PG

By RICK McGINNIS
for Metro Ottawa

REVIEW WHAT WITH THE wild transitions between terror and wonder that fill our childhoods, it's a wonder that more people haven't gone mad before they turn 12, but it does go a long way toward explaining teenagers. Garth Jennings' Son Of Rambow is the first film in years to capture that feeling of giddy dread without being either morbid or mawkish, at least in its first half hour.

Will Proudfoot (Bill Milner) is an undersized misfit who lives mostly in his own imagination, a place he obviously finds preferable to either his school or home, where his single mother is trying to raise her family within the strict prohibitions of the Plymouth Brethren, a Puritan sect that lives with one foot in the 16th century. Killing time in a school hallway one day he ends up being targeted by Lee Carter (Will Poulter), the school's troubled child and lower form bully. The relationship of victim and victimizer ends up being turned on its head, however, by Will's unbelievably sweet nature, and Lee's loneliness, and the two boys end up becoming friends when Lee asks Will to help him make a movie he wants to enter into a contest. When Will's fertile imagination is catalyzed by an accidental viewing of Rambo: First Blood, Lee's previously shapeless collection of stunts develops a plot, and the rest of the school ends up working as cast and crew after Will and Lee are noticed by the French exchange student who's become the apotheosis of cool for the school. Jennings' depictions of school life are both brutal and surreal.

Milner and Poulter give startling performances as the misfit buddies, and if the film slides into sentimentality at the end, it's only a minor flaw in an otherwise charming tale.

Arnold Schwarzenegger has had to battle to protect his Terminator image.

Image is king in Hollywood

Actors fight to protect their likeness from being bought and sold

For actors, image is everything. And misuse of that image is enough to take someone to court for using it without consent.

Over the years, performers have done just that. From Arnold Schwarzenegger suing a car dealership for using his picture as the "Terminator" in an ad, to Fred Astaire's widow stopping the use of the iconic dancer's image in a series of instructional dance videos, "right of publicity" lawsuits are sometimes the only ways an image can be protected. And while a handful of states, including California and New York, have laws on the books protecting a name, voice, signature, picture or likeness for advertising or other uses, the majority do not.

So what happens when a major Hollywood studio wants to sell off film or TV clips of actors without full consent? Are those rights still protected?

The answer is no.

It should come as no surprise to those who followed the 18 days of labor talks between the Screen Actors Guild (SAG) and the studios that one bone of contention was a proposal allowing the studios to set up an online clip library. Under the proposal, the actors would still be compensated for sales of their TV or film clips, but give blanket consent to their use.

The proposal creates a conundrum. Studio contracts generally take precedence, but the guild's current agreement with the producers gives their members the ability to have a say in clips used outside the scope of promotion.

There's no dispute the studios own the clips. But for SAG, giving up control of their members' images is a hot-button issue that could heat even further later this month, when talks are expected to resume.

Since 1960, SAG has negotiated with the studios an agreement that limits the use of their clips for purposes of such things as promotions and trailers. The studios have to get clearance from the actor for anything that falls outside that scope.

> « What we're talking about here is a huge rollback to the existing contractual obligation »
> Duncan Crabtree-Ireland
> SAG Deputy Executive Director

"What we're talking about here is a huge rollback to the existing contractual obligation that our members have," said Duncan Crabtree-Ireland, SAG's deputy national executive director and general counsel. "Our contract specifically says that they will not make any other use of the excerpt without negotiating with the actor."

What scares SAG is what the consumer might use its legally purchased clip for, said one union insider. And there's always a chance the clips will be used in a way that's considered crude by many, such as the YouTube video featuring Canadian musician Peaches' foul-mouthed "F--- the Pain Away" paired with footage of beloved Muppet icon Miss Piggy. That video, added a month ago, already had 323,658 views as of yesterday. REUTERS

Dinklage trumps Trumpkin

By CHRIS ATCHISON
for Metro Ottawa

FEATURE LIKE SO MANY people born in the late 1960s, actor Peter Dinklage (The Station Agent) grew up in George Lucas' alternate universe where wookies, jawas, droids and a mysterious power called the Force ruled the day.

He would watch and re-watch the Star Wars movies relentlessly, finding himself transfixed by their otherworldly storylines, conflicted characters and cutting-edge special effects.

It's no surprise, then, that he leapt at the chance to play Trumpkin, a cynical red dwarf, in The Chronicles Of Narnia: Prince Caspian, the second film in the Narnia series based on the novels of famed children's fantasy writer C.S. Lewis.

"I grew up on Star Wars and suddenly I'm in one of these movies that's like what I grew up on and it's such a thrill," Dinklage says.

"I love movies about the modern day miseries of living in New York and stuff like that if they're done well, but there's nothing like a matinee fantasy film."

The success and overwhelming number of films or full-blown franchises based on fantasy novels that have been produced in the past decade – Harry Potter, The Lord Of The Rings and The Golden Compass, for example –are proof that movie-going audiences share Dinklage's love of the genre.

GETTY IMAGES

Peter Dinklage plays Trumpkin in Chronicles Of Narnia: Prince Caspian.

The 38-year-old actor considers that perspective a unique one.

His stature often leads to his casting as mythical characters in film so by his own assessment, Dinklage knows a worthwhile fantasy film elf or dwarf when he sees one.

He feels the rich characterizations of the Narnia stories have given the books a definitive literary relevance that has maintained their popularity since first being published by Lewis in the 1950s.

"Being four-and-a-half feet tall I've always thought that dwarves and characters like that in fantasy books were really set dressing, were just creatures and didn't have personalities," he says.

"But with these books, all of them, even the talking mouse, are really fully-drawn characters and bring you into that world."

To play Trumpkin, Dinklage drew on the fantasy heroes of his youth and applied elements of their personalities to bring his crusty character to life.

"There's a modern sensibility to Trumpkin, he has a modern wit about him and about his size and, like me, a sense of humour about my size," he says.

"I'm always drawn to the sense of humour in the fantasy world where sword fights are happening all around you, you need that core of cynicism and humour.

"So I really liked that. I knew I would be that voice of reason in this world of wonderment."

The Chronicles Of Narnia: Prince Caspian opens in theatres today.

Filmmaker takes on terrorist topic

By CHRIS ATCHISON
for Metro Ottawa

FEATURE IN APRIL 2004, few had heard of writer-producer-director Morgan Spurlock, whose credits to that point included just a handful of plays and a gross-out show for MTV called I Bet You Will.

One month later his documentary Super Size Me was released, chronicling the one month Spurlock spent on a steady diet of McDonald's — three McMeals a day, no exceptions, resulting in an extra 24 pounds tacked onto his normally lean frame.

He quickly graduated from the ranks of small-time filmmaker to that of giant killer as audiences flocked to theatres to take in his message about the potential dangers of a fast food lifestyle.

The film was nominated that year for the Academy Award for best documentary, but ultimately lost to Ross Kauffman and Zana Briski's Born Into Brothels.

Then in 2006, Spurlock decided to embark on yet another extreme filmmaking mission. This time around instead of taking on fast food giants, he would take on public enemy number one — terrorist leader and 9/11 mastermind Osama Bin Laden — or at least try to find him in the new documentary Where In The World Is Osama Bin Laden?

The five month shoot took Spurlock to a variety of Middle Eastern locales ranging from Afghanistan's dangerous Tora Bora region, to the relatively peaceful neighbourhoods of Jerusalem in a pursuit of Al Qaeda's number one man — assuming he was still alive and at large.

But in the midst of the project, Spurlock learned

CHRIS ATCHISON FOR METRO OTTAWA

he and his wife were due to have a baby, complicating his globetrotting plans.

"Once I found out Alex and I were having a baby, the focus shifted to the kind of world I was bringing a kid into," Spurlock explains.

"We started adding to our list of terrorist experts, terrorists themselves and extremists, people with kids and families. I wanted to meet people like that who were what I was going to be. I'm going to be a father, give me some advice. What's it like being a dad? I wanted to try to connect with people on a level that's much different than a political view."

Spurlock says the documentary was intended less as a statement about the war on terror, U.S. foreign policy and the cross-cultural similarities which exist but regularly elude us, than it was as a primer for a greater conversation about those issues and their impact on the world today.

"One of the things I wanted the film to accomplish was to go beyond two-minute sound bites in the news," he says. "I think the film paints a much larger picture of the state of the world, at least in the Middle East."

Indy returns after 19 years

Solid story the impetus, co-star Allen says

By CHRIS ATCHISON
for Metro Ottawa

GETTY IMAGES
Karen Allen reprises her role as Marion Ravenwood in the newest Indiana Jones movie.

FEATURE IT TOOK nearly two decades, but swashbuckling archaeologist Indiana Jones is finally back with bullwhip and fedora in-hand, ready to blast his way back into movie theatres.

The 19-year delay in returning the iconic adventurer to the big screen in the series' fourth installment, Indiana Jones And The Kingdom Of The Crystal Skull, has occupied fans of the series who have spent years begging for Indy's return.

His delay, it seems, was due in large part to quality control concerns on the part of his creators.

Producer George Lucas and director Steven Spielberg originally envisioned a trilogy which they completed in 1989 with Indiana Jones And The Last Crusade, according to Raiders Of The Lost Ark star Karen Allen (Animal House, Starman).

But when she got the call to reprise her role as the strong-willed Marion Ravenwood in Kingdom Of The Crystal Skull, Allen learned that a solid story idea, not a lack of will, had been stopping Lucas and Spielberg from bringing Indy to life once again.

"I think the real problem, as I know from conversations with George and Steven, is that they didn't see a point in doing one unless they could come up with a story that was really going to be great and worthy of continuing," Allen recalls.

This installment of the series pits Dr. Jones against evil agents of the Soviet Union led by the villainous Irina Spalko (Oscar-winner Cate Blanchett) and includes a new sidekick, Mutt Williams (Transformers' Shia LaBeouf), who helps the adventurer in his quest to find the highly-coveted crystal skull.

While the film is probably the most hyped of this summer's blockbusters — and perhaps the most highly-anticipated movie in years — the 56-year-old Allen admits that when shooting began on Raiders Of The Lost Ark, she had no idea she was part of what would eventually become a cultural phenomenon.

"I had never seen those Saturday afternoon serials and I thought we were making Casablanca," Allen says of the short films upon which the Indiana Jones series was originally based. "I was too young an actor and had no sense of the experience of a blockbuster type of film."

But the question looms, why, after such a long hiatus, was Indiana Jones worth revisiting?

"I think it comes down to good storytelling," Allen explains. "(The stories are) mythic, there's suspense, there's humour and at the centre of the whole thing there's Harrison playing Indiana Jones who is a real, iconic hero.

"As George Lucas says, he's like you and me. He's not a superhero, he's a human hero. He has all kinds of foibles, all kinds of flaws. He can laugh at himself and make us laugh with him and I think there's something unique about that."

Indiana Jones And The Kingdom Of The Crystal Skull opens Thursday.

Valentino targets new clientele

Designer wants to appeal to the price-conscious

ITALY'S VALENTINO, whose founder dressed the Hollywood set and European royalty, wants to make the luxurious brand accessible to the more price-conscious consumer, the group's CEO said recently.

Founding designer Valentino Garavani, who retired in January after the group was bought by private equity firm Permira last year, became a byword for glamour during the nearly half-century he dressed the rich and beautiful.

His trademark red evening gowns and sleek black and white outfits were aimed at the stylish wealthy who attend chic luncheons and gala dinners.

Right: Model Claudia Schiffer and designer Valentino Garavani. Garavani recently announced that he would like to make his brand more accessible to the price-conscious consumer.

"We want to open up the brand to a different consumer," Stefano Sassi, CEO of Valentino Fashion Group which includes Valentino and Hugo Boss, told a meeting of foreign reporters.

"With respect to a clientele that is traditionally richer and not very price-sensitive ... We want to open up to a more modern, also more international, more price-conscious consumer."

Valentino has followed many fashion groups in brand extension and launched a watch collection in April.

"Our strategy is aimed at keeping Valentino at the same level it was put on by (its founders)," he said.

"The excellence of Valentino cannot only be in haute couture and pret-a-porter. It also has to be in ... perfume, a watch."

Despite fears for a slowdown in spending for premium items, Sassi said "things were not going badly" for Valentino.

Valentino is looking to open new stores, and Sassi cited China, India, Europe and U.S. as locations.

makeup experts' top picks for spring/summer

Nicole Clark, beauty boutique co-ordinator at Shoppers Drug Mart and Adi Lando, pro beauty team artist at Sephora, tell us their favourite picks for spring/summer '08:

Nicole:

» Lancome passion purple palette ($44). "Use fun shades to make the eyes pop. Purple is hot this season."

Adi:

» Moisturizer. He recommends the Ultra-Lite Oil Free Moisturizer by DDF, and the Stila-tinted moisturizer with SPF15.

» Sephora's summer blockbuster palette. "It features the hottest shades of the season," he says. "It's very versatile, and you can create any look."

Makeup cleaning

Check bottoms of jars for expiry dates, experts say

By STEPHANIE BOMBA
for Metro Ottawa

Experts suggest cleaning your makeup bag every season.

EVERY MORNING, it stares back at you, its contents overflowing. You've been dreading this all winter, but in the spirit of spring cleaning, you decide to bite the bullet. It's time to clean out your makeup bag.

You are stunned by what you find lining the bottom of the bag: Pencil shavings, foundation powder, melted lipstick, matted brushes, leaky mascara — it's like something out of a horror film.

Don't worry, you're not alone, says Adi Lando, pro beauty team artist at Sephora. "When women come to my store, I always see a disaster — they've sharpened their pencils inside the bag!" he says, aghast.

According to Nicole Clark, beauty boutique co-ordinator at Shoppers Drug Mart, you should clean your makeup bag every season. "You're updating your look anyway," she says, "and you keep all of your products fresh that way."

If you're not sure how old your makeup is, check the bottom of the jar, Clark says. There's a symbol of an open jar on the bottom of the packaging with a number: This gives you the product's shelf life in months from the time you opened it.

"If your makeup changes texture or has a funny smell, throw it out," Clark says. "Err on the side of caution."

Lando agrees. "The best way to find out if makeup is old is to do the sniff test, especially with foundations," he says. "If it smells bad, you definitely don't want to use it."

And if you can't remember when you bought it, toss it, he says.

You should throw away old makeup because it affects the product's performance, says Clark, adding: "The pigment might fade or change a bit." Also, because skin absorbs makeup, any bacteria on old makeup can cause an infection or irritate your skin.

One item you should change every three months is your mascara because the dark, wet tube is the perfect environment for bacteria to grow in, Clark says. "Because it's near your eyes, you want to be extra careful," she says.

According to Lando, you should replace your foundation every six to 12 months, or after six months if it starts to separate or smell. Replace your eyeshadows every few years because there's no water in them, he says, adding: "If you're worried about it, scrape off the first layer and then use it."

As for lipsticks, they should be replaced every two years. "But if you're worried about it," Lando says, "clean the tip with alcohol, or shave off the first layer."

Lip and eye pencils last as long as you sharpen them, Lando says, adding: "I don't know what's with women and sharpeners! How can you use it if you don't sharpen it?"

Once you've cleaned out your makeup bag, don't forget to clean your brushes. "You should clean your brushes before you put them back, and do it on a regular basis," says Lando, who recommends you clean your foundation brushes every day. He suggests using wipes to clean your brushes if you don't have time to wash them.

Fox's comedies falling flat

IDIOT BOX
RICK McGINNIS
rick.mcginnis@metronews.ca

FOX ON THE RUN: "It used to be that Fox could always be counted on to make something genuinely funny," wrote Tim Goodman in the San Francisco Chronicle this week, surveying the wreckage at the end of this year's TV season, "a sitcom that was fearless in execution, wicked and original. But those days appear long gone," he laments, noting that Fox was, at least in 2007-2008, trying to be "CBS Lite" with shows like 'Til Death and Back To You — three-camera laugh track sitcoms featuring stars from recent hits that did little to push the envelope or appeal to young viewers. This sort of advice to innovate would be fine a world where Two And A Half Men isn't the biggest comedy in primetime and According To Jim didn't get renewed year after year in spite of the fact that we're hard pressed to name a single person who watches it. Jim fans are, as far as we can tell, like the Nixon voters who gave him a landslide victory in 1972 despite the fact that people like New Yorker film critic Pauline Kael didn't know anyone who cast their ballot for him. We suspect that, like Kael's Nixon voters, Jim watchers are out there, right next to us, and we don't know they're their because their vote, like their choice of show, is their little secret, and they know how we'll react anyway.

After the cancelation last week of Back To You, star Kelsey Grammar didn't want to say goodbye so quickly, and a story on Reuters has him personally lobbying CBS and its chief exec, Les Moonves, to get the network to take on the show that, according to Tim Goodman, was a better fit there.

Moonves said they were "thinking about it," but by Tuesday it looked like they'd had their think when Grammar talked to CBS' head of entertainment, Nina Tassler. "She dismissed it," Grammar recalled.

Rick McGinnis writes about music, movies, books and television, but not opera.

Bachelorette back for more

By SANDY CAETANO
for Metro Ottawa

Profile DEANNA PAPAS had her heart broken last November when she was dumped by the then Bachelor Brad Womack — but it's her turn now to hand out the roses as this season's new Bachelorette.

Papas

It was the first time in Bachelor history that neither of the final two women were given a rose or a ring. Since then, Papas, a 25-year-old realtor, admits she's been out on one date, which went nowhere fast.

"I was on one date since Brad. One date, and it obviously did not go very well," Papas said from New York during a press call. "It was a friend of mine, and we just went to dinner and I realized that he's just a friend."

Even though Womack decided he didn't want to continue a relationship with either Papas or Jenni Croft, a 27-year-old Phoenix Suns cheerleader, Papas says she's happy he made the decision he did.

"I was really confused when it happened but after it was all over ... I was actually very happy that Brad ... didn't propose to someone just because he was under pressure," she says. "I'm thankful that he didn't propose to me, everything happens for a reason and I'm where I am today because of all of it, and I'm very happy for that."

After her heartbreak on The Bachelor, ABC selected Papas as their newest Bachelorette.

This fourth installment of the romantic reality series, premiering on ABC Monday at 9 p.m. ET and on CityTV Thursday at 9 p.m. ET.

What's a busy young socialite to do when the summer party season is just around the corner and her diet of canapés and cocktails has left her a little squidgy around the edges? Those in the know call on health and fitness trainer Alex Reznik, who created The Socialite Workout specifically for high-profile party girls who can't afford to be camera shy.

"A lot of clients were showing up for sessions after a night of partying," says Reznik on his inspiration for the program. "They were clearly in no state to work out properly, but I still had to find a way to keep them in shape." The solution? Toning exercises that can largely be done on the floor.

It takes a careful balance of drill sergeant and gentle guide to successfully manage a savvy socialite's excuses for not working out, but part of Reznik's charm is that he takes it all in stride. "One time, I went to a client's house to train her privately," he remembers. "She opened the door, dressed to the nines, and said she wanted to treat me to breakfast so we could have a get-to-know-you chat. I told her we could get acquainted just as easily while she was on the treadmill."

SCREEN TEST

Not sure if you have sensitive skin? La Roche-Posay's diagnostic tool can tell.

A new device called the SensiTest, developed by La Roche-Posay and available at select Canadian drugstores, can help you determine your skin type and sensitivity — and how you should treat it. The free two-minute test — which involves answering a series of questions on a computer screen — took nearly 10 years to develop. Once you've determined your skin type, the SensiTest recommends a skin-care regimen adapted to your needs.

SUMMER SKETCHBOOK

In a season of bold textiles, Virginia Johnson's summer collection stands out with its simplicity: Sailboats and dandelions in fuchsia, teal and yellow decorate cotton-voile caftans and sundresses. "Prairie" evokes a dust storm, while "Chevrons" is a tribal motif recalling the African mudcloths that Johnson loves to collect (www.virginiajohnson.com).

Autobiography of a Wardrobe (Pantheon) by Elizabeth Kendall

BOOKS: CLOSET CASES

Imagine if the chartreuse silk blouse or velvet harem pants that glint reproachfully from the back of your closet had feelings or (gasp) memories of what transpired the last time you deigned to wear them. That is the premise behind Autobiography of a Wardrobe (Pantheon) by Elizabeth Kendall. The author, whose previous books include The Runaway Bride, has used this unusual device to write an anecdotal history of fashion trends and disasters, from her vile summer-camp shorts to bold Marimekko prints to a ruched lime-green camisole. If nothing else, it will make you clean out your closet. SANDRA MARTIN

Show offers shot at big money

Local bands vie for contest's $40,000 prize

By KIM MANNIX VERMETTE
for Metro Ottawa

Profile WHEN JOEL MARTIN of the band Distant Society first heard about the Big Money Shot, he thought it sounded too good to be true.

The contest, now in it's third year, is a multi-round battle of the bands put on by local radio station LiVE 88.5 FM. The musicians, who must live within 100 kilometres of the city to qualify, compete in preliminary and final rounds, with winners picking up cash along the way, and getting a shot at winning a quarter-million dollars at the ultimate round in the fall.

"When I heard that bands could win all this money and get some good promotion as well I thought 'what's the catch?' But I started talking to bands who've competed before and everyone has had such a great experience, so that's when we really got excited about it," says Martin.

Distant Society, an alt-rock trio made up of Martin on vocals and guitar, bassist Nick Turenne and drummer Antonio Martino, won their preliminary round in April and picked up $5,000.

Martin said they were "thrilled" to win and are now even more excited to compete tonight against other round-one winners, Amanda Rheaume and Tara Holloway, as well as wild card winners Down In Ashes and Captain Firebutton, who were voted in by fans. The winner of the first round final will get $40,000, an amount Martin says "can do amazing things" for an independent band.

> « When I heard that bands could win all this money and get some good promotion as well I thought 'what's the catch?' But I started talking to bands who've competed before and everyone has had such a great experience. »
> Joel Martin , singer

It's no wonder they keep coming out to compete.

But the fact that the event continues to draw more bands each year is an example of the diverse and plentiful talent here in Ottawa, says Lee Wagner, Director of Canadian Talent Development for LiVE 88.5 FM.

"Each year we think what if we do hit critical mass? Then each year all these great bands come out," says Wagner. "What's actually happening is it's attracting bands to the city so they can get involved and it's always great to bring new talent in."

Initially started as a way to promote Ottawa bands and eliminate the need for them to move elsewhere to "make it big", Wagner says the event has now become so successful that sister stations in other cities have launched their own competitions.

Wagner says the judges, which include both the station's musical team as well as management agencies and record labels reps, have been inspired by the talent coming out of Ottawa. Past winners such as Tim's Myth, Sojourn and Donkey Punch are going on to sell albums and attract fans across Canada.

Martin says it's a great opportunity to meet other bands, and attract new fans. "It's a huge deal for Ottawa, having this many people come out to shows, and I think all of us in the scene are happy to see each other do well."

Rootsy musician happy for ears, even with beers

GET OUT THERE
KIM MANNIX VERMETTE
kim.mannixvermette@metronews.ca

When Ken Workman played the Elmdale House Tavern for the first time earlier this year, he was "blown away" by how a quaint yet boisterous drinking hole could so quickly be transformed into an intimate listening room.

Modestly, he credits a good crowd more than his own ability to make people stop and listen.

"Playing for beers and a bit of money over the years, I guess I've just become accustomed to being part of the atmosphere that people talk over rather than playing to them, so it was a nice experience," he says.

The rootsy, alt-country singer/songwriter and his band — whose sound has been described as John Cougar or Steve Earle fronting Blue Rodeo — have been playing for years in Ottawa and beyond. Workman first started playing in cover bands, but he says it got a little dry and frustrating always "playing someone else's songs" so he slowly began incorporating a few originals into his sets.

> « The first time I played one of my songs I didn't even want to say I wrote it, and I don't think I played again for months. I was terrified. »
> Ken Workman , musician

And despite a passion for songwriting that started when he began to appreciate the storytelling ability of Bruce Springsteen, Gordon Lightfoot and Fred Eaglesmith, Workman was at first nervous to share his own stories.

"The first time I played one of my songs I didn't even want to say I wrote it, and I don't think I played again for months. I was terrified, but I didn't want to give up on it either because I felt like I had something to say."

He brought some of his tunes, which explore "working class" themes of raising a family, coping with the daily grind and romantic woes, to Dave Draves at Little Bullhorn Studios to record a demo. A song called Come Back To Me, which was inspired by advice his mother gave him, is now often requested by a growing number of "regulars" who come out to his shows.

The fans like what they hear, and Workman says he's now working on a longer album, which he'd like to release later this year.

But whether or not his music ever makes it to the masses, for now he's happy playing for a few attentive souls at a local pub. Especially if their willing to listen and sing along, between sips of their beer.

Shania single again

Shania Twain and her husband, producer Robert "Mutt" Lange, have split, People.com reports.

"Shania Twain and her husband, music producer Robert 'Mutt' Lange, are separating after 14 years of marriage," spokesman Jason Owen says in a statement. "This is a private matter and there will be no further comment at this time."

Twain, 42, and Lange, 59, married in 1993, just six months after meeting. They are parents to a six-year-old son, Eja D'Angelo.

In 2002, Twain opened up about her and Lange's relationship, saying: "Our love has always been based on friendship and compatibility," though, she added, "we are very different."

In early 2000, press reports surfaced that their then seven-year marriage was in trouble, but the couple remained together. Around the same time, Twain all but disappeared from public life, retreating to Tour-de-Peilz, Switzerland. "I needed a break, physically and mentally," she explained of her move. "I needed to leave behind the whole 'Shania' thing and be myself."

In the December 2007 issue of Redbook, Twain said: "I struggled a lot internally with my fame, and coping with it has been very difficult."

As for getting back into the public eye with a new perfume and album to be released this year, she says, "I'm not naturally a spotlight person ... [But] I don't mind being the centre of attention in a controlled, comfortable environment." Metro News Services

Foster alone

JODIE FOSTER has split with her long-term partner Cydney Bernard, imdb.com reports. The news comes just five months after the actress paid tribute to her alleged partner of 14 years at an award ceremony. The 45-year-old, who had never before acknowledged Bernard in public, gushed about her during an acceptance speech in December, saying: "My beautiful Cydney, who sticks with me through the rotten and the bliss." The couple has two adopted children together. Foster's publicist was unavailable for comment.

Owen, Kate split

KATE HUDSON and Owen Wilson have called it quits, less than two months after rekindling their romance in Miami, People.com reports.

The end of their erratic courtship (they began dating in September '06) comes amid erroneous reports that the pair were engaged, fuelled by photos of Hudson wearing a Tiffany & Co. ring both on-and-off set of Bride Wars, which she's filming in Boston.

"It was a pretty bad breakup," says a Wilson pal. "Owen said it was a tough one. He definitely doesn't want to dwell on it. He wants to put it behind him."

Rumer to sing

RUMER WILLIS is set to release a record, femalefirst.co.uk reports. The 19-year-old aspiring star – the daughter of Bruce Willis and Demi Moore – has reportedly caught the interest of music executives with her "deep, husky voice."

Willis recently insisted she landed a role in upcoming film Wild Cherry without any help from her A-list parents. She said: "I think when people meet me they're shocked, because the idea of celebrity children is that they're trust-fund babies that don't have any desire to work."

Dunst dumped

MIU MIU model Kirsten Dunst has been replaced by Johnny Depp's partner Vanessa Paradis, femalefirst.co.uk reports. The French singer will be photographed by Mert Alas and Marcus Pioggott for the autumn advertising campaign.

Miu Miu are yet to officially comment on the switch, but it has been claimed Dunst's departure may be linked to her recent stint in Utah's Cirque Lodge rehab clinic.

Since leaving the clinic, Dunst has been seen with her rumoured new boyfriend Ryan Gosling.

HOROSCOPE

ARIES | March 21-April 20
You'll get a great idea to complete a simple task. Life lessons start getting more attention. Be careful when racing around.

TAURUS | April 21-May 21
Trust your intuition to lead you. It's a bad time for making compromises. You'll have to come up with specific information fast

GEMINI | May 22-June 21
An important person is showing interest in you. A change of heart will cause a problem. Take a serious approach to your budget.

CANCER | June 22-July 22
A clever person can make a persuasive offer. Find a place of safety when chaos breaks out. A stormy friend will get into trouble.

LEO | July 23-Aug. 23
A headstrong person leaves no stone unturned. A joker has the information that you need. Don't push too hard for perfection.

VIRGO | Aug. 24-Sept. 22
You'll be given reasons to depend on someone. Confrontations are a bad idea for relationships. A man's boredom is becoming obvious.

LIBRA | Sep. 23-Oct. 23
A guessing game has gone on too long. Someone's fall from grace exposes a plan. An experiment will succeed too well.

SCORPIO | Oct. 24- Nov. 22
An insignificant person will make idle threats. You'll be able to break unhealthy bonds. Indiscretions will give you a laugh.

SAGITTARIUS | Nov. 23- Dec. 21
Someone will set your feelings free. Find out something about a battle of wills. Any carelessness will cause an extreme reaction.

CAPRICORN | Dec. 22-Jan. 20
You'll be told about a refusal being given. A financial burden must be shared. There'll be talk of a specialist being dismissed.

AQUARIUS | Jan. 21-Feb. 18
A consultant will need your evidence. A sentimental person gets on your nerves. Break away from your bad habits now.

PISCES | Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Pleasure changes the focus of an encounter. Careless words will cause a lot of bother. Embrace some painful honesty.
